THE UNION DEPOT PROJECT

A SHORT time ago the Union Depot Commission made a report to the Council in which were set forth its recommendations, as based on its work to the end of the last year. The Commission has made a painstaking investigation of conditions relating to the railway situation in Colorado Springs, and in consequence recommends the selection of a site at or near the present Rio Grande depot for a union station, in case one is decided upon. For the present the Commission asks only that the Santa Fe and the Colorado & Southern abandon their tracks through this city for passenger business, using them only for freight traffic. The present trackage of the Rio Grande along the Monument valley is adequate for the entire passenger business of all roads entering the city, and it probably would not be difficult for the officials of the roads concerned to effect a joint passenger traffic agreement. Of course, it is desirable that eventually the tracks on the east side be entirely removed and the entire railway business centered on the west side along Monument Creek.

The plain cold logic of the situation makes this conclusion inevitable. The basin of Monument Creek is a natural avenue of railway entry to the city from the north and the south, while the route traversed by the Santa Fe on the east side is wholly of high ground, elevated above the street level, involving the necessity of numerous undercrossings. In the three and a half miles covered by the Santa Fe tracks through the city they cross no less than forty east-and-west streets, all of which must, eventually, as the city grows, be supplied with undercrossings at a very high cost.

Moreover, it is plain that the logical growth of the residential section of Colorado Springs is eastward. The high ground extending from Austin's Bluffs toward Prospect Lake commands a view of the mountains unequalled in the city and better settled portions of the city, and therefore possesses exceptional advantages as a residential district. Its development for this purpose has been retarded by two conditions, one natural and the other artificial.

The first is Shook's Run, but nothing is more certain than that this usually-dry creek bed will ultimately be arched over with concrete and made the main trunk sewer of the town. Indeed, plans for this improvement have already been drawn in the office of the City Engineer. Shook's Run is the natural drain for three-fourths of the area of Colorado Springs, and no artificial stimulus will be needed to bring about its conversion into a trunk sewer.

The other obstacle to the growth of the East Side is the Santa Fe tracks. A quarter-century ago, when the Santa Fe projected its line through this city, the people were so anxious to have the road that they were willing for it to place its tracks almost anywhere. But this certainly cannot be urged as a valid reason for the maintenance of the tracks in their present location, now that they are an actual obstacle in the path of its best growth. And their removal is all the more desirable since there is another grade already established and in use on the West Side, to which they could be easily transferred without excessive cost and with resultant advantages to the city wholly apart from such advantages as the increase of values consequent upon the removal of the tracks from the East Side.

However, there are two sides to this problem, as to all others. The Santa Fe company has made a large investment in its right-of-way and buildings on the East Side, and it cannot be expected to abandon them without just compensation. But surely there is nothing unreasonable in the request of the Union Depot Commission that it adopt a policy looking toward the eventual transfer of its business and hold its property on the East Side to the West Side. The Santa Fe and the other railway companies that use its lines would profit in common with the whole city by the concentration of all passenger business at the Rio Grande station. Under the arrangement the East Side tracks would continue to be used for freight business, but in the course of a few years, as traffic increased, they could be wholly abandoned, and a union station built on the site of the present Rio Grande station of a few blocks south of it.

The history of COMMISSION'S WORK OF GREAT VALUE TO CITY. The history of the Union Depot Commission shows the importance of bringing the railroad lines together in a common avenue of entrance and exit as early as possible instead of having them scattered about in a network, crossing and recrossing the city in a dozen different paths. For the larger and more populous a city grows the higher are its property values and the greater is the difficulty of carrying out such extensive projects as the removal of railway tracks. At present two lines of track traverse Colorado Springs from north to south and three lines from east to west. It will be easier to bring these lines together now—if they can be brought together at all—than at any later date, for the cost is certain to be greater in the future than it is now.

In our opinion the Union Depot Commission is doing a work of immense value to the community. Its results will not be apparent in the near future—probably not for many years—but they will be realized in the fullness of time. They offer the only hope that the community has of relief from conditions which certainly will grow more and more oppressive in the coming years.

OPEN PARLIAMENT

BIRDS AS INSECT DESTROYERS. To the Editor of The Gazette: This article, "Birds as Insect Destroyers," published in the January number of The Gazette, has been of great interest to me, and I am glad to see it in your issue of the 12th inst. I am sure it will be of great interest to all who read it.

For several years our shade trees, especially maples and elm, have been suffering from the ravages of the Chinese cotton scale. I have kept close watch over the pest to see if it had any birds as insect destroyers. I have found that the birds do not seem to be much interested in the scale. I have seen many birds feeding on the scale, but I have not seen any of them eating it.

I have seen many birds feeding on the scale, but I have not seen any of them eating it. I have seen many birds feeding on the scale, but I have not seen any of them eating it. I have seen many birds feeding on the scale, but I have not seen any of them eating it.

FROM OTHER PENS

"EASY MARKS." From the New York Tribune: When a man makes a mistake in his work, he is often told to "mark it." This is a very easy way to get out of a bad situation. It is a very easy way to get out of a bad situation. It is a very easy way to get out of a bad situation.

"THE HIGHER COST OF FOOD." From the New York Times: Until all prices fall the cost of meat, vegetables, cereals, butter, eggs and cheese will continue to fluctuate at high figures than have been experienced before in a generation. When a general adjustment takes place upon a lower plane, the cost of foodstuffs will still be proportionately higher.

"A RAPID MONEY DISPENSER." From the Sioux City Tribune: An estimate credits the United States with 500,000 automobiles of an average value of $1,000. This total of $500,000,000 was invested during several years and is not therefore so formidable as it seems to be. It is a smaller amount annually expended in the upkeep of these same cars.

The sum of $1,000 per car annual loss for operation, and the direct expense probably falls below that in the case of the man who gives some personal attention to his car, and does not employ a chauffeur. But there are other expenses, incident to operation, that make this estimate appear reasonable.

The town of depreciation, not usually included in the expense account is easily the heaviest expense. All of a car costing $2,000 is lost in 10 years. At a 100,000 cars a year being run 20,000 miles, the annual cost of depreciation has been $100,000,000. This is a very heavy burden on the car owner.

Half a billion dollars expended yearly in the new line of pleasure-seeking suggests that the car is a very important factor in the life of the car owner. The car is a very important factor in the life of the car owner. The car is a very important factor in the life of the car owner.

Sunflower Philosophy

The backbone of winter is often deviated by people who huddle around the fire, whenever old Boreas kicks up his heels they send up a package of lachrymose epistles and sigh for a country where snow isn't found, where roses and lilacs will bloom the year round. But I love a country with all kinds of snow, where winter has whiskers clear down to his toes, where blizzards cavort and the ice-bergs float over your features till thawed in the spring. For cold is a tonic that braces you up and makes you do better things. The healthy man likes it and dances and sings. A wind whirling down from the white-green hills is better than any one's cottony good pills, while languorous zephyrs will fill you with bile and make it hard labor to burble and smile. There's energy, health and a solace in cold. The backbone of winter is better than gold!

THE DAILY CHIT-CHAT

She signs her letter "A general houseworker." She was asked to write the article by my little talk about the woman who solves the major problem by trying to share some of her interests with her maid and take a friendly interest in the latter's affairs.

She does not have any use for this solution and she is evidently decidedly bitter about the whole question. And yet I am delighted with the opportunity to give over my space today to quoting fragments from her letter, because she is evidently a person of intelligence who has thought much on the subject because she is, as she herself says, "a member of that much discussed class," whose point of view on the problem which they constitute seldom gets public expression.

I spoke of the girl who looked her mistress over very carefully before deciding who would not have her. She retorts, "When you take into consideration the fact that the employer sometimes pays nothing to an employment office manager and the girl pays a very large percentage, you can see that she has a right to see what she is getting."

I wrote of a mistress who cooked herself and still could not keep a maid. From my own experience with the lady who wrote the article, I can truly state that the maid who is a kitchen slave is as nothing compared with the kitchen slave who is a maid.

She concludes her letter with these "general hints. 'Try to be polite. I know this is hard for some people. Politeness is politeness. Hang up your clothes. It is not a houseworker's place to wait on you personally. Supply nice dish-towels, not old flour bags; clean cloth for dusting, not old heavily white rags; brushes for cleaning silver, not your husband's old underwear—these are all right for rubbing off the stove but not for other things. Do not expect a girl to wear black. It is dirty. Do not expect her to answer the doorbell when she is trying potatoes unless your house is heavily insured. Learn to sit properly at the table and do not stick your head out as if the girl will stumble when she is playing the double role of butler and cook. I am sorry I have no more time to mention a lot of other things but will let this do for the present."

Yes, I know some of this is bitter and prejudiced and is all very strongly put. But is it any more so than much of what is said in my lady's living room on the other side of the case?

I never can speak of the servant problem without thinking of what was said to me by a woman who had been for many years the head of an employment bureau. I asked her with which party she thought the most of the troubles between mistress and maid lay. She said, "As far as my observation goes it's about six of one to half a dozen of the other. And yet," she added, "I blame the maid and better educated as they are so much better and more intelligent as they claim to be, they ought to know better."

My correspondent's remarks are bitter and prejudiced, but I am not half so much ashamed of her as I am of the mistress who by reason of the breeding and education they claim, should be more gentle and tolerant and are not.

And bitter or not bitter, there certainly is much to be learned from the letter. Maybe the facts she mentions are not yours, but perhaps they do suggest others of which you are guilty. I am quite ready to admit that they had that effect upon me.

The Great Conflict

A Half Century Ago Today

FEBRUARY 12, 1862

General Price, who had long maintained a footing in Missouri with his small Confederate force against the operations of the Federal army under Fremont, Hunter and Halleck, was obliged to abandon Springfield and fall back toward Clark and Wilson creek. For want of transportation facilities, he was forced to leave behind him some military stores and equipment that fell into the hands of General Curtis, who captured Springfield with a Federal force of 10,000 men.

The Confederate state undertook to build a railroad from Denver, Ariz. and Greenlee through N. M. The project was an act and President Davis supplied the money for the construction of the road as a military necessity.

A Union expedition, under command of Colonel Hagan, returned to Fort Hefley from the country along the Tennessee river. They brought with them stores seized at Paris, Tenn., and reported having found the tents and camp equipment used by the Confederate troops who had evacuated Fort Henry.

The city of Edenburg, at the west end of Alabamian sound, was occupied by an expedition under command of Lieut. A. M. M. U. S. N. A small force of the Confederate fighting artillery was stationed in the town, but not in sufficient strength to offer any resistance. Eight Confederate cannons and a schooner were destroyed, and two schooners captured.

HORSE THIEF'S WARDROBE

Kansas Culprit Has Store of Varied Apparel.

From the Emporia Gazette. In the capture of Elmer Cortell, the man who confessed to Sheriff Tom Connor to stealing the bay team of Bert Johnson's, the county officials believe they have captured a professional horse thief. Cortell would have it understood that this is his first offense, and that claim is borne out to a degree by the fact that Cortell is "jarred loose" and talked freely of the affair to the Lyon county sheriff. But Cortell told that he had a trunk at the Coylett home, near Emporia, where he last worked, and Under-sheriff Charles Gibson went after this property, and, instead of one trunk, he found two trunks and three valises.

These were crammed full of clothing, partly new; eight or 10 pairs of shoes, some of which never had been worn; rubber boots, leggings, duck coats, jackets and the like, and toilet articles, such as soap, talcum powder and sundries of that sort. A pair of silk high shoes, a pair of low but patent leather shoes, a chamois vest, such as men who drive much in cold weather wear for chest protection, a fur-lined duck coat, and many other articles were brought to the jail. Cortell said the property was his. He said he bought it.

The theory of the county officers is that Cortell has been in the habit of running horses out of the country and selling them. Once in a strange town, he would purchase goods at the stores, they believe, which is said to be a frequent ruse of the crooked clientele for averting suspicion. Few of the articles in this assortment of Cortell's are high class; most of them are the homely, everyday sort of articles, which a man of ordinary bearing would purchase. The officers say that a man of respectable appearance, in the guise of a working man, clad in overalls, duck jackets and low leather boots, would be the last man in the world to be suspected of horse stealing.

THE ISOLATION OF GERMANY

Joseph W. Jenks in Review of Reviews.

Germany stands today almost alone in Europe. She is an ally of Italy. For 12 years the emperor and his government have promised a helping hand to Turkey. And now the war in Tripoli has come under such conditions that she can help neither. Did England, as many think, for this purpose encourage Italy's attack?

Germany, like every great ambitious country, believes in expansion. Which way she ever turns she finds England, France, Russia or guard. Her experienced conservative leaders feel it is best to keep the peace, grow in wealth and help the common man. One lately said, too, of the emperor, "He cares for his people; he wants their welfare. His grandfather and father had seen war, and they instilled into him a wholesome knowledge of the hell it is. And besides he is a real Christian. He will have no war unless his people and the honor of his country demand it." But the ambitious military men and the younger patriots with hot blood in their veins and with heads perhaps now too cool think him and his advisers weak and short-sighted. And their feelings now inflamed, will erupt on January 12.

The elections, now, with the issue of the tariff emphasized by the high cost of living and the feeling of international isolation and jealousy, may prove of significance far beyond the territory of Germany. They are war work careful study.

Williamstown is said now to have more visitors from the United States than from any other nation except its next door neighbor, Germany. The city of Lucerne alone entertained more than 25,000 Americans in 1910.

IN THE EARLY DAYS

THIRTY YEARS AGO TODAY TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY

FEBRUARY 12, 1882 FEBRUARY 12, 1862

There were several running and trotting races at the Pike Peak Driving park, before a large crowd.

The first term of the Colorado Institute closed. This was a private school conducted by Mrs. Zangmeister.

A young lady named Weich was thrown from a horse on Cascade avenue and put in the hospital.

Dr. Robinson had been appointed agent for the new pneumatic tire Century Columbia bicycle. And was busy showing it off to local cyclists.

Dr. Stanton purchased the Colorado Springs Business college. Rev. E. Stanton Carrington was to be associated with Mr. Gandy in the management of the college.

Widow's Willful Daughters

(Copyrighted, 1912, by Laura Jean Libbey.)

Was there ever a pretty widow, who considered herself a subject for a second matrimonial venture, who did not look with awe, not unminged with misgivings, at her daughters, who seemed to be growing like human mushrooms? To her it seems to be only yesterday that they were playing with their dolls. She actually has a chill when she hears her eldest girl remark that, seeing it's leap year, she is going to invite a certain young man to call. When there are vigorous reproaches, the girl answers vigorously: "I'm not a child of 6. I'm nearly 16. If you please, mamma, even though I don't look it."

The girl persists in her determination until the mother is forced to drag the measures. There is only one way which the widow knows of to keep the young man from "coming away" as she proceeds to take the one course left to her. Instead of taking out the dresses in her daughter's trunk, lengthen them, she proceeds to insert a good size tuck in her dresses, which is quite permissible, she thinks, owing to the fact that the young miss looks decidedly nearer 13 than 15. Last, but by no means least, if she were to let the girl have her own way, it would spoil her chances of getting the girl a step-father.

There are widows who think that they are losing their attractiveness with a daughter who has a beau. The wise widows keep beaus away until after they have settled their own matrimonial chances. Surely no one can find fault with the poor little woman who must think and plan matters as best she can.

She will not find so much opposition, providing she does not make the girl's beaus too short, so that her companions will begin to inquire facetiously if she is contemplating a trip back to childhood.

No girl can stand complacently the gibes of her companions. If anyone unkindly remarks that her pretty, youthful mother wants to keep her young in order to marry again, it is the last straw. The daughter then and there makes up her mind that she will frustrate such a plan, even if she has to put on trailing dresses to accomplish it.

She will go still further; she will do her hair up in puffs and curls, like mamma's own. If there is anything which a young miss craves it is to be considered a young lady. She cannot be kept in seclusion behind closed doors of such a girl experiences a revolution of feeling. She seems being longer termed a little girl, and desires to be a full-fledged young lady if she has to coerce her brother into consenting by dining her plans into his ears by night and by day. It is always a widow's daughter who strives hard to be a young lady before she is well out of her teens.

She is usually the first girl of her set to wed and to bring in a son-in-law to sit at the head of the table. Such a willful girl may have her mother ever afterward to support. All because she would not give her a chance through her willful determination to be a young lady while she was still a child.

RENEWED ACTIVITY IN FORESTRY IN COLORADO

At the last session of the legislature a new forestry law was enacted which provided that function to the state board of agriculture. It also provided for the state forester who will have his headquarters at the state agricultural college.

The appropriation that went into the new forestry law was put in the third class, but as a portion of the appropriation has been made available, and as the authorities at the state agricultural college are about to start things going, the state forestry board will be organized at its annual meeting to open at the assembly hall of the Denver chamber of commerce is going to have the newly appointed forester Prof. R. O. Longyear tell the public about the law and what the authorities are about to do.

Since Col. E. T. Ensign of this city was let out of his good work at the close of 1909 the state has had no one to administer its forestry law.

MRS. ELLA SCIBIRD DIES

Mrs. Ella Scibird died at her home 612 North Corona street early yesterday morning as a result of an operation. She was the wife of P. A. Scibird, former trustee for El Paso county and had been a resident of this city for many years. She was 72 years old.

Mrs. Scibird was well known in Colorado Springs and the news of her death came as a surprise to her friends, although it was generally known that she had been seriously ill.

Mrs. Scibird came to this city with her husband in 1884. The latter had been a resident of the state several years prior, but in 1879 he returned home and was married to Mrs. Scibird that year in Fairbury, Ill. Mrs. Scibird was born in Richmond, Ind. and her family was one of the most prominent of that state. She had been an active worker in the Baptist church here and in the west.

In addition to her husband, Mrs. Scibird leaves three children, Harry A. Scibird, manager of a gold reducing mill in Utah, Ralph Scibird living in California, and R. C. Scibird of this city. Funeral arrangements will not be announced until definite word can be obtained from the children and other relatives in the east.

JUDGE LITTLE TELLS OF PARENT'S DUTY TO CHILD

The duty of the parent towards the child was the subject of an address delivered by County Judge Little at the First Christian church last night.

Judge Little spoke on the responsibility of the parent in forming the child's life and urged that the parents teach the children the good things instead of letting them go wild until they have to reform them. He also pointed out the necessity of planning the education and training of a child, and urged that his parents bring the child up in the constructive rather than the restrictive method.

At the close of his address Judge Little told of the juvenile court and the work it is doing here.

Blood and Temper

Feed the Org and Thus Sweet-

Ozonolion

Pretentiousness, crossness, contrariness—call it what you please in a child is not, as many parents believe, an outcropping of original sin.

It is almost always the protesting cry of the nerves against thin, undernourished blood.

The situation is to be met, not with scolding, but with patience and Ozonolion.

Bad temper in a child usually has a purely physical foundation.

If you think this is a mere theory, you ought to see some of the jolly, chubby youngsters who were prevail-er-away little imps, before their appetite mocha gave them three spoonfuls of Ozonolion a day.

With the better blood that Ozonolion made came better temper.

What is true of children in this respect is just as true of grown-ups.

FIGURES ON DESERTION AND NONSUPPORT GIVEN

Family desertion and nonsupport have not decreased during the last six years. Juvenile delinquency and incorrigibility are often the direct result of the lack of proper provision in the home.

Nonsupport at first glance seems to be a private matter, but it is one of a public offense when society is obliged to support the family and should therefore be punished.

These are some of the statements made by William H. Baldwin in a report received by the Colorado Humane society at Denver.

An examination of the laws of all the states at the beginning of 1905, says Mr. Baldwin, showed that desertion of nonsupport, or both, was a misdemeanor in 44 states, a felony in four, and a quasi-criminal offense in one, while in Iowa, Nevada, Oregon, Tennessee and Texas there was no law on the subject.

Since then, he continued, 32 laws have been passed bearing on the subject by 30 states and territories. There are now 11 states according to Mr. Baldwin, which make nonsupport and desertion a felony.

Colorado enacted a law at the last session of the legislature making nonsupport and desertion a felony, with a maximum sentence of one year in the penitentiary. Several cases have been successfully prosecuted under this new law.

Says Wife Drove Away
Patrons; Seeks Divorce

Milburn H. Mott, an employee of the Texas oil company, Denver, has filed a suit in the district court at Denver for a divorce from Tena May Mott.

Mott charges his wife with cruelty, mental and physical, and the least of which was the termination of his carpet cleaning business in Colorado Springs. He declares that his wife called up all of his women customers and accused them of misconduct with him.

Mott also says his wife has a habit of tearing his clothes off him while in her fits of anger. The Motts were married December 28, 1902, and have six children.

Dumb Chills and Fever

Douglasville, Tex. Five years ago, I was caught in a trap at the wrong time, writes Mrs. Tena Mott. I was taken with dumb chills and fever and suffered more than I can tell. I tried everything that I thought would help, and had for different doctors, but got no relief. I tried to take cardui. Now I feel like I am in many months' rest and I am out of the thing and does it well. That is the secret of its 50 years of success. As a tonic, there is nothing like it in the store like it. As a remedy for dumb chills it has no equal. (The Mott family)
